Prevent Disease with Good Nutrition

Fifth in a series
Reasons for Hope in the Fight Against Cancer

We all know good nutrition is important, but did you know that it can actually prevent disease? It can! In fact, good nutrition is the single most important factor determining your health today and in the future. According to the Journal of the American Medical Association,

"...it now appears that people who get enough vitamins may be able to prevent such common chronic illnesses as cancer, heart disease and osteoporosis." <sup>1</sup>

Andrew Weil, MD, agrees with the AMA by suggesting in "Six Ways to Prevent Breast Cancer," that we supplement wisely with folic acid, Vitamin D and antioxidants, all of which may help decrease the risk of cancer. <sup>2</sup>

Which foods invite disease?

Diets high in saturated fat, hydrogenated fats, red meat, processed foods and refined carbohydrates (pasta, white bread, white rice, sugar) rob us of needed nutrients, which may make us vulnerable to disease. Decrease your health risks by eating a low-fat, high-fiber diet AND reducing your exposure to environmental and dietary toxins. Consider that if you continue to accumulate toxins, the good nutrition you're taking in may not be adequate to counteract their effects. <sup>3</sup>

Which foods fight disease?

The first role of a good nutrition plan is to feed and strengthen your immune system, your body's best defense against disease.

Start by adding probiotics to your diet to enhance the quantity and quality of the friendly bacteria in your intestinal tract. These bacteria are 50% of your immune defense system, plus they enhance nutrition absorption and toxin elimination. These are just a few of the reasons it is said that, "Good health begins in the colon."

Next, maximize your antioxidant intake. Antioxidants directly prevent free radicals from damaging healthy tissue plus they strengthen and support your immune system. Eat a diet high in natural antioxidants from fruits and vegetables and supplement with those nutrients known to fight disease. <sup>4</sup>

Healthy fats (Essential Fatty Acids) are needed for cell repair.

High levels of fiber are important, particularly for digestive efficiency and removal of toxins.

High-potency nutrients may play a major role in reducing the risk of diseases, including cancer, as reported in the following research summary: The women in the study who were deficient in Vitamin D at the time of diagnosis with breast cancer were 94% more likely to experience the spread of the cancer and 73% more likely to die within 10 years of their original diagnosis. (One in three women in this study were Vitamin D deficient.) Vitamin D is available in U.S. dairy products, and our bodies can manufacture their own with about 15 minutes of sunlight. <sup>5</sup>

Realize, too, that high stress levels are also a risk factor for cancer and other diseases. Remember to reduce your stress level with daily exercise, prayer, meditation and time outdoors.
