If your body is a temple...

is it a well-tended sanctuary or more like a neglected ruin?

If we treated our bodies with as much respect as we do a house of worship, we would see miracles of healing.

That's because the body's natural state is radiant health: Your body will automatically strive to heal itself when given adequate air, water, nourishment and rest (in the absence of a disease). You've witnessed this truth every time your skin restores itself after a cut, scrape or burn. This self-healing power can assert itself only when our bodies are well-nourished.

Nutrition is the single-most important factor for good health.

Being well-nourished today is a challenge. Despite an abundance of foodstuffs in our grocery stores, the nutritional value of that food has diminished for a number of reasons:

- It is grown in nutrient-depleted soil
- It is likely full of pesticides, herbicides
- It is often harvested before it is ripe and transported thousands of miles
- Processing strips food of its complete nutritional package
- Many foods are enriched with synthetic nutrients which are less bio-available than the natural food

Further exacerbating the situation is the non-stop lifestyle that we've adopted. It strips away time to prepare "real" food, relax and share meals, which nourishes family life and improves nutrient absorption. Instead, many opt for easy-to-prepare-on-the-run foods that have little to recommend except their convenience and appeal to our junk food palates.

If your body is a temple...

Fortify and restore your temple with whole foods

As a first step, choose whole foods over processed foods, because only they have the complete nutrition our bodies need. Whole foods such as brown rice includes the entire grain - bran, endosperm and germ. Each part offers important macro- and micronutrients plus other components which increase their absorption.

These are just a few of the reasons why eating a variety of whole foods will help you fill in nutritional "blanks" from skipped meals, high-stress lifestyles and vitamin-depleted foods.

Young Living offers superfoods that are delicious and convenient

Since day one, Young Living® has demonstrated their commitment to top-quality nutrition by making their foods and supplements strictly from organically-grown whole foods.

Thanks to Young Living, we now have access to a wide variety of whole food snacks, meal replacement shakes and supplements that are powerfully nutritious, truly delicious and conveniently packaged for our busy lives.

If you haven't tried all of Young Living's superfoods, let me introduce them to you now. You'll find whole foods for adults and children, dieters, active people and athletes—everyone who wants to be healthier, look better and feel better.

Three delicious, whole food shakes make light work of eating healthier, losing weight, toning up and building muscle.
